Deceit is a species of fraud.¹ Deceit at common law was and is, essentially, fraud, that is, a deliberate effort to obtain something of value by deceiving another.² In some jurisdictions conduct prohibited under separate statutory definitions of fraud and deceit is substantially identical.³

Deceit is actual fraud,⁴ and it consists of any false representation or contrivance whereby one person overreaches and misleads another to his or her hurt.⁵ Deceit excludes the idea of mistake, and fraud has been termed a grosser species of deceit.⁶ The tort of fraudulent deceit results from either a willful or reckless misrepresentation or a suppression of material facts with an intent to mislead.⁷

Observation:

The term “fraud” applies when there is a contract between the parties while the term “deceit” applies when there is no contract between the parties.⁸

In some jurisdictions, there is no separate cause of action for deceit, and deceit is encompassed within a fraud claim.⁹
